$1,095,000 SPENT ON 37 AIRPORTS

Doolin, of S. F. Field, Reports Activities By SERA Labor

More than $1,095,000 was expended in the improvement of 37 airports in the state of California during the past year through the assistance of SERA, according to B. M. Doolin, airport supervisor for the emergency relief commission of the state.

Airports at strategic points and extending from Montague on the northern border to San Diego benefited under the program and work is still under way on many fields, Doolin reported.

Work on the ports included grading and leveling of runways, enlargement of field areas, erection of field and hazard lights and beacons and the removal of hazards such as high power lines and old buildings.

All of the fund expended was used for labor and materials. Doolin, superintendent of San Francisco Airport, serves as supervisor of the federal projects without pay and with permission of the City of San Francisco.

NEW FORD V-8 CAR ON DISPLAY HERE

Pictured above is the new Ford De Luxe Ford Sedan for 1935, which has just been announced. The new Ford V-8 cars have new, modern body lines and a combination of engineering improvements giving greater ease of control and increased riding comfort. These include relocation of the front spring and engine farther forward, and seating of the passengers between the wheels and closer to the center of the car to provide improved car weight balance and passenger weight distribution. Crankcase ventilation has been added to the Ford V-8 engine, which more than 1,300,000 are now on the road.

MENU FLASH TALK TO BE ON MEAT

There will be lots of meat in the Menu Flash program next Friday morning at 10 when Joan Andrews interviews Raymond F. Luce, San Francisco meat jobber.

Joan wants to know how it happens we have "spring" lamb practically the year round, where our meat comes from anyway, what cuts the budget watching housewife should buy, and a lot of other things about the packing house business.

By education and actual experience Mr. Luce is qualified to supply the right answers and promises some very practical information.

ROAD WIDENING APPROVED

DAILY CITY, Jan. 15.—Approval of the plans for widening Mission street from Colma to the San Francisco line was given by the city council at its recent meeting here.

Landslide Buries Coast Fisherman At San Gregorio

Carried 20 feet down toward the narrow beach, Frank Andrade, 27, a rancher, was seriously injured Sunday when the perch from where he was fishing near San Gregorio, on Half Moon Bay, gave way.

The landslide buried him with rock debris, until nearby friends dug him out. Andrade suffered a fractured skull.

CRASH SCATTERS ALE

Scattering bottles of beer and ale in every direction, a beverage truck was overturned and a sedan driven by Zola Magne of Atherton was slightly damaged Saturday afternoon when they collided on the Woodside road just off El Camino Real. The driver of the truck was Raymond Ingrunget of Burlingame. No one was injured.

V-8'S APPEARANCE MUCH IMPROVED

Ford's Beautiful Line For 1935 Strikes Modern Note

In appearance Ford V-8 cars for 1935 are entirely new, with lines which are distinctively modern and a definite departure from former Ford practice, according to the Towne Motor Company, local Ford dealer.

Bodies, grille, hood, fenders and running boards have been newly designed using flowing curves to carry out the motif. The new design has been made possible by moving the engine forward more than eight inches and over the front axle. The space made available on the chassis has enabled the development of the new body lines almost untrammelled by space limitations.

The car is approximately eight inches longer from bumper to bumper, the rear wheel tread has been increased by more than two inches, and the new frame is so shaped that the body is set lower. Wheels are an inch smaller in diameter and tires a half-inch larger in section. The result is an impression of mass and stability.

The new body lines are especially striking in the treatment of the rear of enclosed types. The slope of the windshield has been increased to reduce wind resistance and lessen glare in night driving.

The design of the fenders is entirely new. They are more highly crowned, with sweeping skirts and a drain gutter formed by rolling under the outer edge.

BODIES WIDENED

Bodies have been materially widened. As a result front seats are from four to five and one-half inches wider, according to body type; and allow three adults to sit in comfort. Span of the rear seats is increased one and one-half inches.

Because the water filler cap is located under the hood, a new permanent radiator ornament is made possible. It is a chromium-plated Ford V-8 insignia, with wings extending several inches to the rear on the de luxe types.

Burlingame Man Held By Officers On Attack Charge

Victim of a beating assertedly administered by two Burlingame youths, Miss Nora Lee Rice, 18, of San Francisco, was today recovering from a blackened eye, the loss of several teeth, and other injuries received early Sunday morning.

According to the girl's story, she was accosted by the two after she attended a show Saturday night. They were in a car and called to her. She thought she recognized one of the men, and went to the machine. Realizing they were strangers, she started away, but they forced her into the automobile, drove her to San Bruno, she declared, into a side road and assaulted her. Then when she later refused to enter a house in Burlingame they beat her, she told police.

Officers arrested Mike Muscatel, prize fighter known in the ring as Mike Dempsey, of Burlingame, and are looking for the second assailant. Muscatel, according to officers, admitted driving the car but denied taking part in an assault, according to Police Sergeant Jack Theuer of Burlingame. Muscatel is charged with assault and battery.

ELM SHIPMENT BAN IS PLACED

Quarantine Ordered To Stamp Out Disease

Agricultural Commissioner Max J. Leonard was under definite orders today, following previous instructions issued months ago by the state department of agriculture, to place a complete quarantine against all elm nursery trees, elm lumber and elm logs coming into this county from all eastern states.

Similar orders have been issued to all of the county commissioners in California.

This drastic measure is to prevent the introduction of Dutch Elm disease into the state which has caused such high mortality among all varieties of elms in the east.

INTRODUCED IN 1930

This disease is believed to have been introduced into the United States from the Netherlands in 1930 through the medium of elm logs cut from infected trees, according to Leonard. These logs are largely imported by veneer factories, and the disease is carried from them to healthy growing trees by the small bark beetle known as scolytus. Action of the disease is so severe that trees attacked frequently die within a year.

"Residents of this county should not attempt to secure any elm nursery stock from the east as all such shipments will be refused entrance into California," Leonard states. "Moreover, it is important that any diseased condition of elms in the county which might indicate the presence of Dutch Elm disease be immediately reported to the commissioner's office in Redwood City. An examination by inspectors from the office will be made immediately on the receipt of such a report and specimens taken for examination and determination."

WOULD BE DISASTROUS

"If such a menace should strike the elms in the county," Leonard further states, "a condition worse than the cypress disease so prevalent here now would result.

"There is no known cure for this disease except prompt removal and burning of the affected trees. Young trees as well as old are equally susceptible. There are some 5000 elms planted in this county which figure is known by actual survey and count by the Commissioner's office made a few months ago on receipt of warnings issued by the state department of agriculture relative to this new disease.

"This survey also serves as a basis of information in preparation for any action that might be necessary in the future to combat the elm leaf beetle and other pests of elms which are known to occur in other counties in close proximity to this county, and while not found here yet it seems reasonable to presume they will ultimately find their way to our elms."

"The federal government is anticipating a prompt uprising of the state department of agriculture to attempt to eradicate the disease where found in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Maryland and Indiana. Thousands of elms, particularly in New Jersey and New York, have been found infected and are either dead or dying from this disease which threatens to wipe out all native and cultivated elm trees in the United States unless prompt and vigorous measures are immediately undertaken."

SAVINGS HELP FILL COIN BANK

As a means of informing motorists of how they may save with Triton motor oil, Triton dealers throughout the Pacific coast will distribute miniature coin banks to car owners during National Thrift Week, January 13 to 19, Union Oil Company representatives said here yesterday. The coin banks are replicas of the one-ounce Triton container, and will hold a substantial number of small coins. This youngster was one of the first to receive "Save With Triton" bank.

AIR LINE GAINS IN 1934 LISTED

Bay Area Air-minded, 68% Increase Reveals

United Air Lines in 1934 maintained its record of flying more passengers, planes, mail and miles than any air line in the world, and will shortly announce plans for substantial speeding up of coast-to-coast and inter-city schedules according to a statement of President W. A. Patterson, reviewing the company's operations.

The company showed a substantial gain in passenger and express over 1933 and also in mail, after allowance for the 90-day period during which all air mail contracts were cancelled.

Comparative figures, with December, 1934, estimated, were:

| 1934                            | 1933                  |
|---------------------------------|-----------------------|
| Mileage flown.....              | 15,000,000 14,714,415 |
| Revenue passengers carried..... | 150,000 127,693       |
| Mail carried.....               | 3,000,000 3,182,165   |
| Express carried, tons.....      | 568 234               |

Proving that California is one of the most air-minded states in the nation actual travel figures from the bay area showed an increase of 68% for 1934 over the total for 1933. During the past year 20,613 revenue paying passengers boarded United Air Lines at Oakland and San Francisco as compared to 12,271 for 1933.

Despite the gain in passengers and cargo carried, United operated at a substantial loss due to the cancellation of its air mail contracts and the lower pound-mile basis of pay it is now receiving for transporting air mail.

United, with the faster Boeings, will shortly reduce coast-to-coast and inter-city flying time. The 1935 type Boeings of which United has a fleet of 55, have a top speed of 202 miles an hour and can cruise at 139 miles an hour. All the Boeings are to be equipped with geared engines to provide a fleet of 55 planes with a high speed of more than 200 miles an hour and capable of cruising more than three miles a minute.

BEGINNING THE LOVE STORY OF GALE HENDERSON; A NEW SERIAL OF REAL LIFE CONFLICT AND DRAMA

CHAPTER I.

GALE HENDERSON looked up at the whirling, silken spindles. White and lustrous and beautiful, they whirled in their mad dance. Round and round, round and round.

There was nothing about the long, gray room with its noisy machines, its 60 women workers, hands moving up and down, clamping on bobbins, snapping them off, nothing about the afternoon slowly drawing to a close to hint to Gale Henderson that this was to be the most eventful, exciting day of her 23 years.

Gale bent her head as she snapped off a bobbin. She was thinking that her purse contained exactly $4.53, with pay day still five days away. Maybe her brother Phil could spare her a little something—

The ringing of the bell cut in sharply—the bell that was release for the day shift. Machines slowed. Into the corridor trooped men and women, talking now, hurrying, jostling, some of them laughing. Gale found herself pressed beside small, gamin-faced Josie Gridley.

"Gosh, am I glad this day's over!" Josie said fervently. "Goin' to the dance tonight?"

Gale shook her head.

"I thought you and Steve—" Josie began, interrupting herself to gaze questioningly at the other girl.

Steve Meyers, steady, reliable mill employee.

Brian Westmore, whose father built the mill.

"I've got a dozen things to do tonight," Gale said. "Maybe Steve will go, though."

Josie laughed scornfully. "Fat chance of Steve goin' anywhere without you! I wish it was me! Steve's the best-looking fellow in the spinning room."

They turned a corner and were separated, as others pushed forward. Gale went into the cloak room, took her hat and coat from a locker. It was a worn coat, dark blue originally and only a trifle faded. Her hat was blue, too, brimless, showing light brown, waving hair. Gale's gray eyes looked at the world beneath dark, wide-curving brows. She had lips that were generous, expressive. Gale Henderson, lacking real beauty, possessed that rarer quality—a vital, stirring attractiveness that challenges interest. "Personality" it is called usually, for want of a more definite term.

A minute later she was outside, feeling the cold January air against her cheeks. Gale breathed deeply. She saw a familiar figure waiting a dozen yards ahead and hurried forward.

"Steve!" she called.

Steve Meyers' square shoulders bulked large in the short, fleece-collared coat. "Late, aren't you?" he asked.

STEVE'S eyes were blue and his cheeks ruddy. His was no face to cause Hollywood motion picture directors to glance twice in his direction, but Josie Gridley was not alone in considering him "good-looking."

Gale nodded in answer to his question. "I stopped to talk to Josie," she said.

They walked in silence for a few minutes. Then Steve said, "They let out two more from the spinning room tonight."

"Two more! Oh, Steve—what's going to happen?"

"Don't ask me."

"But they can't just keep cutting down all the time—turning people off! What about the rest of us? How do any of us know it won't be us tomorrow?"

"You don't need to worry about that."

"I'm not so sure. But it wasn't myself I was thinking of. It's Phil—"

"Phil's all right."

"Of course he is. But he's so young—only 19. He—well, I can't help worrying about him. There's so much Phil has missed—dropping out of school, the way he had to, when he was so anxious to go on."

"Everybody can't have what they want in the world," Steve Meyers said grimly.

The girl looked at him quickly. "I know," she said. "You gave up school, too, didn't you? But you're so—so strong and able to take care of yourself. You always know just what to do and how to do it. Phil's not like that. Besides, you did finish high school. Phil had to quit in his second year."

"What's got you so worried about Phil? Anything special?"

Gale shook her head. "No," she said. "Only the way he talks. He goes around with Joe Gillaspie and Fritz Moon and that crowd and he's getting a lot of wild ideas. About everything being against people who haven't got any money, and getting even with the rich. When anything happens at the mill—like people getting fired or getting pay cuts—it makes him worse."

They walked in silence for several moments. Then Gale said hesitantly, "Steve, do you really think things are going to keep on this way? Is it because the company isn't making any money that they're letting so many go?"

The man laughed harshly. "You don't think Thatcher's missing any of his three meals a day, do you?"

"No, of course not. It's just the last six months—while Mr. Westmore was sick and since he died—that they've been cutting down so."

"Sure. Since then Thatcher's been running things to suit himself. Before, he took orders from Mr. Westmore. Thatcher's still general manager but he might as well own the place. I don't suppose Mrs. Westmore knows anything about what's going on—"

"There's Brian Westmore," Gale added. "He doesn't know anything about it either. Over in Paris—supposed to be learning to be an artist. Wouldn't you think he'd have come home when his father was so sick?"

STEVE did not answer the question. "I used to see Brian Westmore," he said, "when I was a kid—Brian Westmore, son of the rich James Westmore, wearing his little blue sailor suit and riding on his pony. All I had to ride on was the backs of delivery wagons—when the drivers didn't see me and make me get off!"

"Brian Westmore was at State when I was there," Gale said thoughtfully. "We were in the same history class. Of course I didn't know him—but he sat three seats in front of me, across the aisle."

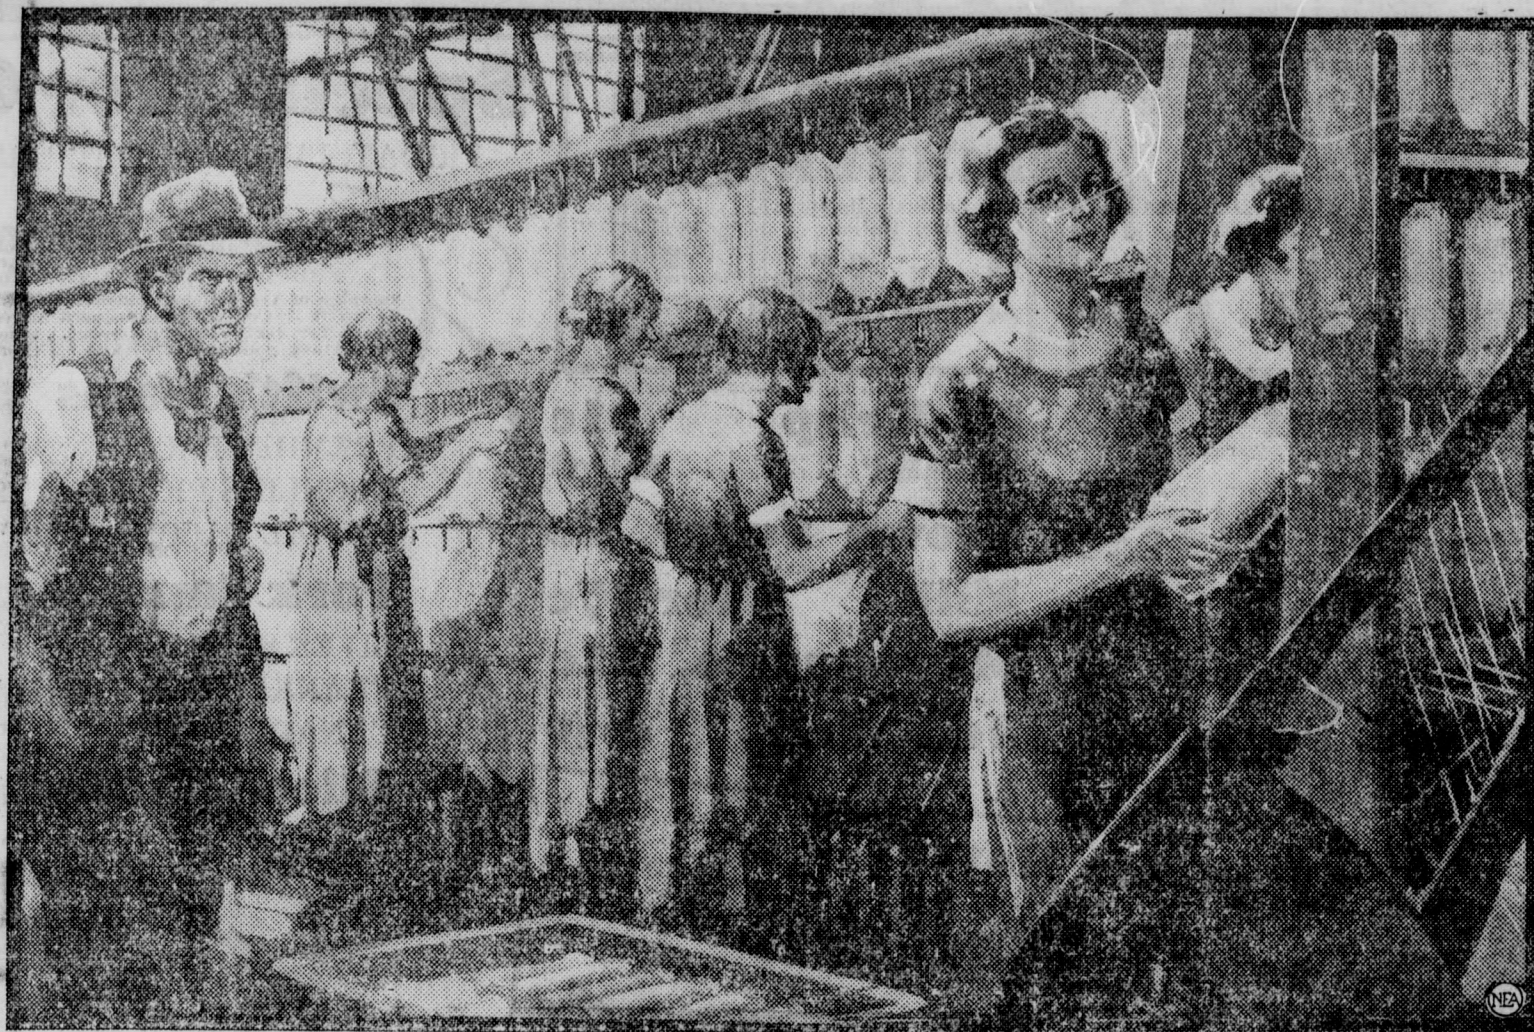

"And now he's in Paris," Steve reminded her, "and you're in the mill."

"Yes—I'm in the mill."

Long ago Gale had forbidden herself thoughts of self-pity for the sudden ending of her college course two years earlier. There was no use pretending it hadn't been heart-breaking, equally certain that there was nothing else that could be done. The money Aunt Adelaide had left for her niece's education so that Gale could become a teacher, had to go for doctor's bills and medicine when her father—hearty, strapping Tom Henderson—was taken ill, never to walk again.

Gale had come home at once. Tom Henderson's salary as a mechanic in the silk mill had been a good one. The Henderson children were among the few in the mill village to continue schooling beyond the upper grades. Their home was one of the best in the neighborhood. Their mother had been dead since shortly after Phil's birth, but Tom Henderson had insisted on keeping his children with him. There was always some woman in the village glad to do the Hendersons' cooking, cleaning and washing for a few dollars each week.

Thus Gale had grown up, a bit more mature, with more of a sense of responsibility than most youngsters of her age. The dream of college, of life away from the mill village, had always been before her.

There was nothing about the long, gray room with its noisy machines . . . nothing about the afternoon slowly drawing to a close to hint to Gale Henderson that this was to be the most eventful, exciting day of her 23 years.

AS quickly as school days had ended came the disillusionment when she tried to find work. At first Gale would not hear of her brother leaving high school. Her two years' college training made her confident that there was work she could do, work that would earn enough to keep up the Hendersons' home.

But Gale was inexperienced and there were no jobs—even for those with experience. Trying times. Hard times. Men out of work, standing in bread lines. Women asking for charity to keep their children fed and warm. A few weeks' searching brought a desperate awakening to the seriousness of the situation. Gale was glad to become a mill girl. She earned $14 a week in the mill and was sure that in time it would be more.

The $14 did not stretch as Gale had hoped. One day when Phil announced with determination that he was not going back to school, she did not oppose him.

Brother and sister had worked in the silk mill ever since. Their earnings paid the bills for their living, their father's and for his medical treatment. Gale took on the duties of cook and housewife as well as those of mill girl.

No one had done more to help her keep her courage, to you see, Steve, we can't—can't talk about getting married?"

"No," Steve said. "I don't see anything of the kind. I—I love you, Gale. I want to marry you. That's all there is to think about. You and me. We've both been working for others, thinking about others for a long time. Aren't we entitled to some happiness? Don't you see that if we keep putting things off—waiting for times to get better or for this or that to happen—we'll always be waiting? Oh, Gale—"

His arms were around her now. The girl drew back. "No, Steve," she said.

"Well," he said roughly, "I guess that's the answer. You don't need to try to make it easy for me!"

She turned quickly. "Steve, I can't say I'll marry you. I do care for you! You've been the best friend I've had. But there's no use pretending things aren't the way they are. We couldn't be married—"

"You could say whether or not you want to marry me—whether you love me."

There was an instant's silence; then the girl said softly, "Wait a few days, Steve. You'll let me have a few days to think about it, won't you? I'll tell you then."

"Why, sure—if that's what you want," he agreed.

Vicky Thatcher, a spoiled society beauty.

Robert Thatcher, general manager of the mill.

face each day as it came, than Steve Meyers. Steve's story was different. Two years older than Gale, they had known each other in grade school. Steve's mother was a widow. At 17 he had gone to work as a bobbin boy. Now he was in the spinning room, considered one of the steadiest, most reliable workers.

The girl knew he cared for her—cared deeply. And her feelings for Steve? Gale's heart beat a little faster when she asked herself the question. She felt warm, glowing. But she put off answering; she thought she had no right to give the answer. There were her own responsibilities and there were Steve's.

She was totally unprepared that winter afternoon when she felt Steve's hand on her arm, halting her. She looked up, heard, in a voice not at all like Steve's naturally, "Listen, Gale, I want to talk to you. You know I'm crazy about you—I've been crazy about you for a long time. Before you went away to school. I didn't think I'd have a chance then—but you came back. Since then, when we've been going around together—well, sometimes I've hoped—listen, Gale, will you marry me?"

SHE frowned. Her eyes, shadowed by the late afternoon light, looked almost black. She said softly, tremulously, "But, Steve—"

"Does that mean you won't? That you don't care anything about me?"

"Steve!" She touched his arm. "I couldn't marry anyone—not right now. I do care a lot for you. A lot. You've done so much for me—for all of us. I don't know how I could have got along without you! But we can't get married. I mean, even if I was sure—"

"Then you're not sure? You don't know whether or not you want to marry me?"

"I couldn't marry anyone, Steve. You know that. I've got Father to think about. And Phil. I couldn't leave them."

"I'm not asking you to leave them. I mean, we could find some way. Phil's old enough to look after himself, and we'd manage about your father some how."

"And there's your mother," the girl interrupted. "Don't

THREE hours later Gale closed the door of the house softly behind her and stood for a moment on the top step.

The winter moonlight fell over the little patch of yard, over the street with its rows of box-like houses on either side. It was almost as bright as daylight, and yet there was magic in the night that hid the ugliness of the street.

Gale was wearing a jacket of leather—a relic of college days—over her short, dark skirt, and on her head was a scarlet tam. She carried a pair of ice skates.

She went down the steps, walking briskly. It was altogether too perfect a night to remain indoors. Phil had left the house immediately after dinner, as usual. Her father was reading. There was no reason, Gale told herself, why she should not spend an hour on the river.

She turned a corner and, ahead, could see figures moving across the ice. The street went down to the old boat house. A few yards away, near the edge of the ice, a bonfire was burning. Half a dozen boys and girls stood near it and Gale recognized among them Joey Dinwiddie and one of the O'Connor boys. She sat down on a log and began putting on her skates.

A girl in a bright red sweater went swinging past. It was Katie Shantz from the mill, skating hand in hand with a boy from the shipping room.

"Where's Steve?" Katie called, coming nearer.

"Home, I guess."

Someone caught Katie's arm, whirling her around. There was general laughter, and Gale swung out on the ice, heading up the river.

IT was glorious—gliding with sure, swift strokes, feeling the wind against her face. Silver and black was the river. A silver ribbon winding between ebony banks. Gale skated faster. She wanted to get away from the others—to have the silvery, moonlit river to herself. Out here she could think.

Katie's question about Steve. It was partly because of Steve that Gale had come to the river tonight, alone. She hadn't wanted Steve to come with her. Steve was waiting for the answer to his question—and Gale didn't know the answer. Sometimes when things went as badly as they had been lately she thought of marriage as a refuge. Steve's strength to rely on. Steve's kindness. Oh, yes, he was kind. And strong, too. Steve had so many fine qualities. She recognized them all.

And yet, vaguely, Gale knew that Steve wasn't the man she had pictured in romantic dreams. Well, what of it? Did any girl ever realize those dreams—really?

Steve wasn't asking her to marry him now. Of course they couldn't do that. It would have to be a long time in the future. There was her father and Phil—

Gale had been skating swiftly. She had rounded the bend, taking her out of sight of the crowd near the boat house. The shimmering, silver river called her and Gale leaned against the wind, skating with longer, faster strokes. She saw the black outline of a stump frozen in the ice ahead, swerved to avoid it—and suddenly felt the surface beneath her tremble.

Gale heard the crack, screamed. She knew what had happened. She cried out again, terrified, helpless.
